SCOPE

IMMS 12 focuses on materials where architecture at the mesoscale (2 - 50 nm) plays a dominant role in controlling materials properties.

While the conference has historically focused on mesoporous materials, this year's conference welcomes all aspects of science and engineering research where nanoscale architecture plays a dominant role in controlling function or properties.

Relevant topics include materials synthesis, materials characterization, and all applications of mesostructured materials.

Applications encompass, but are not limited to catalysis, separations, drug delivery, and a broad range of topics related to energy harvesting and storage.
